

Triggers, Vulnerabilities, and Urges

A worksheet for understanding the conditions that increase risk for unwanted behavior

Purpose: This worksheet separates background vulnerabilities from immediate triggers, explores what an urge is trying to accomplish, and helps build practical friction and alternatives.

1. Separate Vulnerabilities From Triggers

Vulnerabilities	Triggers
Background conditions that make an unwanted behavior more likely: fatigue, isolation, stress, conflict, shame, lack of structure, easy access.	The more immediate event, thought, emotion, cue, opportunity, or urge that begins the behavioral sequence.

2. My Vulnerability Map

Vulnerability	How I notice it	What reduces risk

3. My Trigger Map

Trigger	Typical urge / thought	Usual next step

4. Understand the Urge

When the urge appears, what am I usually hoping the behavior will give me?

What emotion or experience am I trying not to have?

Where do I notice the urge in my body?

What thoughts make acting on the urge seem reasonable in the moment?

5. Build Friction and Build Alternatives

Risk area	Friction I can add	Alternative I can make easier
Access / opportunity
Isolation / secrecy
Unstructured time
Emotional distress

6. My Plan for the First 15 Minutes

When I notice a high risk trigger, the first thing I will do is:

Person I can contact:

Place or activity I can move toward:

What I want to remember about the urge:
